Many say Banská Štiavnica is the most beautiful town in Slovakia. Everyone knows that it attracts artists, romantics and generally all people able to perceive its magical atmosphere. There is one widespread aphorism about Štiavnica: People are divided into two groups: those who love Štiavnica and those who have not been there yet.

ABOUT THE PROJECT

Culture has for many years been a marginal area in European Union politics and in the common EU budget. The main resources for culture, education, research, innovation and media are still national budgets, corporate and private funding. All this resulted with the increasing number of racism, violence, intolerance and discriminatory activities and EU scepticism. Our society still fears differences, and if you are different in any way that means you have some kind of social default and you are not socially adopted. Culture should be given a greater role in all kinds of political initiatives, and politicians need to find new ways to integrate cultural initiatives and communication in their agendas. We need to rethink the role of tradition and the folk in society. The best target group to start with are the young people. Here in our project, we are focusing on analyzing and accepting the differences based on national, cultural and religious differences. We want to carry out this project in order foster the mutual understanding between the people from different countries by promoting the country's culture and customs, trough introducing the traditional music, songs, dances, clothes and food. Social exclusion is a complex long-term process where multiple factors are usually at play - factors which can impact each other and which can worsen over time. When this happens, a young person's situation can go from bad to worse in a vicious cycle. Therefore, we want to gather young people from different countries and to promote what can be found in common, so they can find similarities among them and feel as one.
